VENDULA HAUSNEROVA

BIO

Greetings! I'm Vendula, an agility enthusiast, world traveler, and life lover.

For over 26 years, I've felt at home on the agility field, no matter the country or continent.

As a competitor, trainer, and judge, I cherish experiencing the sport from different perspectives for a full 360-degree understanding.

I love seeing different handling styles in the ring, training people to exceed their limits, and watching them be proud of themselves and their dogs.

Nowadays with an even deeper emphasis on the mental part of the game.

My path has taken me from being a multiple Slovak Champion to representing my country at the World Championships and European Open for several years.

I've had the honor of being invited to judge and train across most of Europe, as well as in Australia, Japan, USA, Singapore, Colombia, Ecuador, Mexico, Costa Rica, and Guatemala.

Through my podcast, Agility on the Road, I share conversations about agility, the mental game, travel, and the inspiring life stories of the people I meet along the way.

Life's serendipity has led me to a yoga teacher training in India and to encountering Buddhist philosophy while hiking the Himalayas in Nepal.

I am a never-ending learner who loves to dive into how our brain can work for us; combined with my studies in positive psychology, I now integrate all these lessons into both my life and my coaching.

I love to be disconnected in nature with my dogs, reading autobiographies, hiking, or playing with the ocean. I strive to live in the present moment to be a better teacher, friend, and person.
